“The Mystique of Winchester M1s”

The question ‘Why with so many Winchester-made Garands, are some of the CMP priced over $3,000’ was posed to Bruce N. Canfield, Field Editor, American Rifleman January 2020, who answered as follows:

“The primary reason for the seemingly inflated prices for Winchester M1 rifles is the “mystique” of the Winchester name in the minds of many collectors.... with 500,000 M1 rifles manufactured by Winchester, the guns are not particularly rare, although they are certainly much less common than the Springfield-made Garands. In order to bring the $3,000-plus prices... a rifle would have to be in the same configuration as manufactured in(or before) World War II, including the correct Winchester-made stock, barrel, operating rod, front sights, etc. since the vast majority of M1 rifles were subsequently rebuilt in the postwar period, rifles remaining in their original World War II configuration are quite uncommon, and will fetch surprisingly high prices.

Some collectors attempt to “restore” a rebuilt Winchester M1 rifle to the correct World War II specs, but the extreme scarcity of many WRA parts – especially stocks with the proper markings and barrels – makes this a very difficult endeavor. Unfortunately, fake parts are becoming more and more common, and it behooves a collector to be cognizant of the differences between the fake and genuine parts. Regarding M1 rifles modified for match competition, while such rifles are desirable for competitive shooting, they will typically bring much less on the collector market than comparable examples remaining in original “G/I.” configuration. An exception would be the genuine National Match 1 rifles fabricated by Springfield Armory, as opposed to standard rifles “tuned up” for match competition.”

We sought a program on Kentucky United’s goals re County/State Sanctuary status, but...

We made contact with KU and asked for a representative to provide us with a program for January’s meeting but were advised they were unable to respond to our request citing they were not able to provide individual briefings at this time.

Hmm..., this during the week KU and associated 2nd Amendment groups gathered in Frankfort to meet with legislators pushing for Kentucky to be a sanctuary state. We’re disappointed.

Let’s discuss the county and state 2nd Amendment sanctuary movement at the meeting. Does the Club want to support the movement and to what extent. We don’t have much data outside of the news media so perhaps we can get a program later this year.

Concealed or Open Carry Issues

Starting July 27, 2019, a Kentucky-issued CCDW certificate is not required for concealed carry in Kentucky. No so for surrounding states, few of which have “constitutional carry”. Beware if you venture outside of Kentucky without a Ky CCDW.

And there can be issues with “open carry” in terms of personal safety. Don’t miss this briefing and discussion at the January meeting!
